GOULD TAKES FRYEBURG, 9-8

Whitman Hits Triple In 9th With Bases Loaded To Win Game

In an exciting, tho poorly played game, Gould Academy nosed out Fryeburg Academy by one run. Kilgour, Fryeburg pitcher, had the Gould batters at his mercy for six innings, allowing only two runs while his teammates collected five. In the seventh inning, with two out and the bases loaded, Paul Daniels hit a double bringing in three runs to tie the count, 5-5.

At this stage of the game Browne went in to relieve Allen who was having a hard time, due more to the poor support of his teammates than any fault of his own. Sanborn tripled in this frame and scored on an infield put out, giving Fryeburg a one run lead. They again scored in the eighth giving them a 7-5 lead as the ninth inning began. In this inning, with the bases again loaded and two out, Whitman this time, showered himself with glory when he drove the ball into the trees for a triple and scored three runs. He then scored on Vail's timely single for the ninth and winning run. Fryeburg made a valiant attempt to overcome the lead but were successful in scoring only one run. Potter was thrown out for the last play, Browne to Whitman, with Webster on third base ready to score.

TWO-MINUTE SERMON

(By REV. GEORGE HENRY)

PUNISHMENT

"Punishment—Pain or loss suffered by a person because of doing wrong." That is Webster's definition. Punishment, then, is not the act of an angry and vindictive God as some teach. Suffering is the result of sinning. "Evil shall slay the wicked." Put your hand in the fire and you will be burned. A deliberate act and a natural result. Don't charge your pain to God. Put food before a hungry man, he refuses to eat, he starves. Who is responsible? If a sick man refuses the only remedy that promises a cure he dies, who is to blame? You must "work out your own salvation" or you accomplish your own destruction. Some men pray for relief from physical suffering when all they need is an emetic or a cathartic. As well ask God to prevent the pain of the surgeon's knife while refusing the anesthetic. All the ill that flesh is heir to here and all that may befall a man hereafter may be traced to his own action. What is true in this respect in the physical is also true in the spiritual realm.

SOUTH WOODSTOCK

May 8 — Yesterday and today seem identical with May Day. Such a flood of warm sunshine! All nature seems to respond and is glorified in its efforts.

Myron Littlehale, son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Littlehale of this place, is making good, being nearly self supporting since early boyhood. Myron has the honor of holding a grammar school diploma from Union school, this town, an academic diploma from the Pine Tree Academy of Auburn, and is now attending Atlantic Union College at South Lancaster, Mass. If perseverance continues we see much ahead for the young man.

The Davis boys have been marketing home grown potatoes for the entire past week much of the product being delivered for garden and field planting.

Delightful refreshments were most attractively served the guests, and at a late hour good-byes were said, all thanking their charming hostess for a happy afternoon. The next meeting will be held at the new home of Mr. and Mrs. Alvah Hendrickson on May 17th.

Farming operations are in full swing: fencing, digging rocks, plowing and harrowing; getting ready to go on with the work of producing crops to feed the hungry multitude. All have got to eat. "And come to each what ere befall the farmer he must feed them all."

A stranger called at the door, a pleasant appearing gentleman past middle life. He remarked, "I would like to ask you some questions." We granted the request. "First tell me if there is an Advent church in the place." Before I could reply he said, "There used to be one down below on the new state highway." We said, "Yes, it was burned several years ago." He said, "I am so sorry. I used to know many of those brothers and sisters, Enoch Bartlett and his wife and son, Madison

NEXT stop's Penneilton, ma'am. Marion Caruthers looked at the magazine she was reading to her grip and put on her coat and hat. A moment later she was standing on the platform.

"Miss Caruthers?" said a pleasant voice, and Marion saw before her a middle-aged man with bare head.

"I'm Thompson, the principal of the school where you're going to school."

"How nice of you to meet me," she said. "I'm awfully glad you're the principal because I know I'll like you."

"You're very young, Miss Caruthers," he mused.

"Yes, this is my first school," she admitted.

"And to come so far."

"It is a long way, but I've always wanted to see the South."

"I hope you'll like it; we don't just get home in time for dinner," he continued.

"Dinner!" she gasped. "Why, come we always have dinner at school."

"Guess you'll have to make allowances," Mrs. Thompson met Marion at the door and gave her a warm welcome.

"So glad to see you, dear. Are you very tired? Dinner's just ready. I'll show you your room so you can take off your things."

When Mrs. Thompson came back down stairs she and her husband had a hurried word in the hall.

"Isn't she attractive?" said Mrs. Thompson. "What lovely eyes and such a quick infectious smile."

"Yes, I'm afraid she's too young to manage children in a country high school. Had no experience."

Their comments were cut short by the entrance of Marion and she hurried into the dining room.

"Biscuits?" said Marion, quizzically at the dining table. "Up North we have bread—bake Wednesday and Saturdays."

"I'm sorry we have none," said the professor quietly.

"And you serve string beans with pork," Marion went on in amazement. "I never saw that before."

By the time the meal was over Mrs. Thompson felt that somehow well-cooked dinner had fallen short of the mark. It was very disappointing—she had worked so hard.

The following day school began and Marion was busy all the rest of the week getting things organized in her classroom.

At the first parent-teacher meeting she nearly had an open fight with one or two of the mothers. She just could not make them see. At first of all, she had a feeling that they did not understand her. They were only one person in Penneilton, she did, and he was John Hamilton, the Latin teacher.

Fall slipped into winter and the students of Penneilton county high school away. Marion had enjoyed the Thanksgiving holiday immensely.

Professor Hamilton's mother had invited her over to Thanksgiving dinner. Then there were two more and Marion had made a delicious hit each night. Still she did not feel that she was one of them. Southern people were nice, but queer—so queer.

And now spring had come again and soon Marion would be going back home and for some peculiar reason she was not sure that she was glad. She had made a success of her teaching and Professor Thompson had been unstinted in his praise of her work.

The parent-teachers decided to give a party in honor of themselves and to commemorate the most successful year's work. Marion at on her best evening dress and looked her stunner as she sat beside Professor Thompson at the party table.

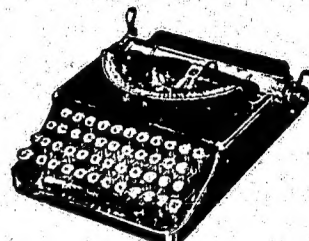

"This banquet," she said, "is in honor of Miss Caruthers. Every thing on the table has been prepared by a northern woman who has been over from Delton, and the help all came out of a northern book. We wanted just one

It was a real philosopher who said: Everything does not happen for the best but you can make the best of everything that happens.

Every town has a man who knows just how everything should be done and when and why. He knows just why everyone who has failed to make a success has done so, but in the majority of cases it is not noted for his success or ability to manage.

NEXT stop? Pennelton, ma'am," Marlon Caruthers looked up, at the magazine she was reading to her grip and put on her coat and hat. A moment later she was standing on the platform.

"Miss Caruthers?" said a pleasant voice, and Marlon saw before her a middle-aged man with bared head.

"I'm Thompson, the principal of the school where you're going to teach."

"How nice of you to meet me," he said. "I'm awfully glad you're the principal because I know I'll like you."

"You're very young, Miss Caruthers," he mused.

"Yes, this is my first school," she admitted.

"And to come so far."

"It is a long way, but I've always wanted to see the South."

"I hope you'll like it; we do. You'll just get home in time for dinner," he continued.

"Dinner!" she gasped. "Why, up come we always have dinner at six o'clock."

"We're just ordinary folks down here. Guess you'll have to make allowances."

Mrs. Thompson met Marlon at the door and gave her a warm welcome.

"So glad to see you, dear. Are you very tired? Dinner's just ready. I'll show you your room so you can take off your things."

When Mrs. Thompson came back down stairs she and her husband had a hurried word in the hall.

"Isn't she attractive!" said Mrs. Thompson. "What lovely eyes and such a quick infectious smile."

"Yes, I'm afraid she's too young to manage children in a country high school. Had no experience."

Their comments were cut short by the entrance of Marlon and they hurried into the dining room.

"Biscuits?" said Marlon, quizzically at the dining table. "Up North we have bread—bake Wednesdays and Saturdays."

"I'm sorry we have none," said the professor quietly.

"And you serve string beans with pork," Marlon went on in amazement. "I never saw that before."

By the time the meal was over Mrs. Thompson felt that somehow or well-cooked dinner had fallen short of the mark. It was very disconcerting—she had worked so hard.

The following day school began and Marlon was busy all the rest of the week getting things organized in her classroom.

At the first parent-teachers' meeting she nearly had an open tilt with one or two of the mothers. She just could not make them see. And worse of all, she had a feeling that they did not understand her. There was only one person in Pennelton who did, and he was John Hamilton, the Latin teacher.

Fall slipped into winter and the students of Pennelton county high school were away. Marlon had enjoyed the Thanksgiving holiday immensely.

Professor Hamilton's mother had invited her over to Thanksgiving dinner. Then there were two dances and Marlon had made a decided hit each night. Still she did not feel that she was one of them. Southern people were nice, but queer—so queer.

And now spring had come again and soon Marlon would be going back home and for some peculiar reason she was not sure that she was glad. She had made a success of her teaching and Professor Thompson had been unstinted in his praise of her work.

The parent-teachers decided to give a parting banquet in honor of themselves and to commemorate a most successful year's work. Marlon sat on her best evening dress and looked her stunner as she sat beside Professor Thompson at the long table.

Mrs. Burton rose and began to make a speech.

"This banquet," she said, "is in honor of Miss Caruthers. Everything on the table has been prepared by a northern woman we have asked over from Dalton, and the elves all came out of a northern cookbook. We wanted just once

There will be evening meetings at the church every Friday. Sunday School at 9:30 D. S. time, Sunday morning.

Alpheus Coffin was at South Paris one day last week.

Why is it that a man who spends 40 dollars a year for tobacco and pays twelve dollars taxes is always complaining on how high his taxes are?

Every critic likes to think his criticism is of the constructive type. The critic who merely finds fault with things as they are, but has no better plan to suggest is of no value in the scheme of things.

Your town will do a lot better if the people will try as hard to say nice things about it as they do to criticize and find fault with it.

to do something down South as they do it up North, and—

"Oh, forgive me," interrupted Marlon, jumping up. "I see it all now, but I never realized how tactless it was. That's what's been the matter. What a little beast I've been! Would it help to make amends now if I tell you I love the South and the people and the cooking and everything, and I did so want them to love me. If you ever hear me say up North again I hope you'll run me out of the country. That's what I deserve, anyway."

Flushed and breathless, she dropped into her chair again.

"Yes, I'm certain Miss Caruthers feels every word she's said about liking the South and all that," said Professor Hamilton, rising, "because she—she's going to marry a down southerner—she's going to marry me!"

"Jack, you—I never—"

But the rest was lost in a round of applause while Professor Hamilton congratulated himself on his brilliant coup d'état.

ANDERSON SPEAKS ON ATHLETICS

Drawing is a branch of Manual Arts, or Algebra a branch of Mathematics, so is Athletics a branch of the Physical Education department.

I thought perhaps the best way to get at this question of "The Value of Athletics" would be to first find out what are the objectives of our whole system of Education (not Physical Education) and then see if Athletics has anything to contribute toward these objectives.

The National Educational Association has listed seven objectives which are generally regarded as the true objectives of our public school education. These are the objectives:

1. Health.
2. Citizenship.
3. Worthy use of leisure time.
4. Worthy home membership.
5. Vocation.
6. Ethical character.
7. Command of fundamental processes.

Let us consider the first objective, Health. You all realize that without a good strong sound, healthy body you cannot hope to get the enjoyment out of life that you should, nor accomplish the things you should. Can you think of any department that offers more to the attainment of that first and all important objective of health? The muscles of the body need exercise to grow strong and large. Athletics not only furnish an opportunity for muscular development but developes keen quick thinking under fire and thus keeps the brain keen and clear.

Now let us consider the second objective—Citizenship. A good citizen should obey the laws of his country, recognize the rights of others, cooperate with his fellows, face disaster courageously. Where else in our system can you get actual practice in developing such qualities? In our athletic games such as football, basketball, baseball, etc., there are rules or laws that must be obeyed. Cooperation in mind and body is essential to good "team-work." Your opponents rights must not be tread on lest the good name of the school you represent be lowered. When you face overwhelming odds you must fight to the finish and face defeat courageously. That's training for the game of life.

Now let us see what a contribution athletics makes toward "worthy use of leisure time." You are aware of the fact that due to the shortened working hours, daylight savings time, etc., the people of America have more leisure time than they have ever had before.
This time should be spent wisely and as America is becoming more and more athletically minded it is learning that a great deal of this time spent in athletics is wisely spent because of the health and recreational benefit derived. I feel sorry for the young man of today who has not learned at least one of the three major sports (football, basketball and baseball) so well that he can at least enjoy with utmost pleasure the procedure of a game. Other athletic sports that add greatly to one's leisure time, and sports that can be continued on thru adult years, are tennis, volley ball and golf. In the U. S.

Army officers are taught to spend a great part of their leisure time in sports and athletic activities.
Few people reach the age of re-irement with as strong healthy bodies as do the Army officers who retire from active service.

Worthy Home Membership.
Everybody loves to see a healthy, happy family. Undoubtedly the lessons of the athletic field and the gymnasium carry over into the home. Obedience, will to work, cooperation, respect, are all qualities that are taught on the athletic field that if carried into the home would help to make the home-life of America a great deal happier.

Perhaps athletics does not have much of a hand in deciding what your vocation will be. Still, thousands of our young athletes attend teachers' colleges and physical education schools to become physical training teachers, coaches of various sports, playground instructors in the larger cities, directors of Y. M. C. A.'s etc.

Of course athletics contributes toward the development of ethical character. The code of athletics in most schools is high. Play fair, fight hard, live simply, think clearly, are all qualities any athletic coach would like to instill in his boys.

Perhaps you all know or have at least heard the name of that immortal coach, Knute Rockne, of Notre Dame, who passed away a year or so ago. He said this, "I do not worry about the time my boys are in school or at home, but I am vitally interested in what they do between school hours and bed time." Any sane thinking parent should be so interested in what his boy or girl is doing during leisure hours. Here again athletics does its bit in relieving the strain of worry for thousands of parents.

"SWEETS FOR CHILDREN" FARM BUREAU PROJECT

"Sweets for Children" is the title of a new project on Child Feeding offered by the Extension Service to Oxford County mothers. North Paris held the first meeting of the series on May 4. Other groups scheduling the subject are: East Bethel, Dixfield, Brownfield, and North Newry.

Sugar is our most one-sided food, as it is completely lacking in the health-giving growth, promoting minerals and vitamins. In this county we consume annually 100 lbs per person, as against 10 lbs per person in 1833. High pressure advertising by the sugar interests has led people to think that it is impossible to get too much sweets.
This is far from true. With children particularly, sweets of all kinds should be served in small quantities and then only after the more important vegetables, milk and fruits are eaten.

If you would safeguard your family from the dangers of too much sugar, follow these simple rules:

1. Give no sweets to children between meals.
2. Try to discourage the children from eating sugar on things, such as bread, tomatoes, cereal, etc.
3. Use molasses in cakes and cookies at least one-half of the time.
4. Serve cakes and cookies with out frosting or filling at least one-half of the time.

To err is human. To admit it is something entirely different.

I am wondering how a government that handles its own business so inefficiently can advise a farmer
how to manage a farm.

SOUTH PARIS DEFEATED, 4-3

Gould Academy planned a second defeat on South Paris within a week when they set them down, 4-3, May 3d. South Paris began the scoring in the second inning after Morrisette was hit by a pitched ball and McNally made an error at second base. Millett then stepped up to single and score Morrisette. The visitors scored again in the third on doubles by Brown and Cummings.

The Academy batters were held helpless by Stiles' slow curves until Martinson opened the sixth inning with a beautifully placed bunt down the third base line. A single by Vail followed by two South Paris errors paved the way for Gould's first two runs. Again in the seventh inning Gould scored two runs on hits by Martinson and Allen. Allen's hit in this inning was a feature of the game. The ball struck "high-up" on the side of the girls' dormitory. It would ordinarily have been a home run in any man's ball game.

The supposedly good hitters, the first four in the batting order, failed to get a single hit while the last five men all got at least one hit, with Martinson getting two. Millett, South Paris freshman third baseman, led the attack for the visitors with three singles, while Brown got two doubles and Cummings a double and single.

TWO LOVERS

Two lovers by a moss-grown spring:
They leaned soft cheeks together there,
Mingled the dark and sunny hair,
And heard the wooing thrushes sing.
O budding time!
O love's best prime!

Two wedded from the portal stept:
The bells made happy carrol-ings,
The air was soft as fanning wings,
White petals on the pathway slept.
O pure-eyed bride!
O tender pride!

Two faces o'er a cradle bent:
Two hands above the head were locked;
They pressed each other while they rocked,
Those watched a life that love had sent.
O solemn hour!
O hidden power!

Two parents by the evening fire:
The red light fell about their knees;
But all the heads by slow degrees
Had gone and left a lonely pair.
O voyage fast!
O vanished past!

The red light shone upon the floor
And made the space between them wide;
They drew their chairs up side by side,
Their pale cheeks joined and said,
"Once more!"
O memories!
O past that is!

HALF OF MY LIFE

Longfellow

Half of life is gone, and I have let
The years slip from me, and have not fulfilled
The aspiration of my youth to build
Some tower of song with lofty parapet.
Not indolence, nor pleasure, nor the fret
Of restless passions that would not be stilled;
But sorrow and care that almost killed
Kept me from what I may accomplish yet.
Though half-way up the hill, I see the Past
Lying beneath me with its sounds and sights;
A city in the twilight dim and vast,
With smoking roof, soft bells and gleaming lights,
And hear above me, on the autumnal blast.

A PROHIBITIONIST
From an Old Newspaper

I am a prohibitionist through and through,
As the woes and crimes of this world I view,
And I pity its sad condition.
The fountain of wrong I'd forever dry;
To stop the flow, I'd stop the supply.
And this is prohibition!

If I knew a baker so bad and bold
That he poisoned each loaf of bread he sold,
I'd try him by inquisition.
Then I'd oven him up in stone walls four,
Where he could not peddle out death any more,
And this is prohibition!

If I saw a butcher selling meat
Putrid and spoiled, in the market-street—
Not worthy the son of perdition,—
I'd fasten him up with a chain so strong
That he never again would do this wrong,
And this is prohibition!

If I had a fold, and a wolf should creep
Within, to devour my lambs and sheep,
I would never wait for communion;
But to stop his prowls I'd stop his breath,
And save my flock by his instant death,
And this is prohibition!

If a poisonous snake by the roadside lay,
To bite every traveler that passed that way,
I'd curb his Satanic ambition;
An iron heel on his head I'd bring,
And crush out his life and his venomous sting,
And this is prohibition!

If I had a dog that would bark and bite,
And worry my neighbor day and night,
I'd perform a feat in divison.
In spite of his barking and yelping and tears,
I'd cut off his tail just back of his ears,
And this is prohibition!

If vendors of rum throughout the land
Are dealing out poison on every hand,
Regardless of age and condition,
I want a law to stop the supply,
And the law enforced till the traffic shall die,
And this is prohibition!

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Antonette Peyton, senior at the southern university of Maryland, resents Peterson Thayer's intentions to marry her. Thayer, a year-old coed, and there is a stormy scene, ending with bitter recriminations, the tension being increased by Max Vernon, another student, long Thayer's friend, reproaching Ivy for breaking a date with him. Thayer and Vernon threaten each other.

CHAPTER II.—Larry Welch, Ivy's brother, professor at the university, is appealed to by Tony Peyton to end his sister's friendship with Thayer. Welch and Tony Peyton are in love with each other. Welch does not see what he can do in the matter. Tony then tells him she is married to Thayer, but is his wife only in name.

CHAPTER III.—Larry determines to see Thayer and end his association with Ivy. Tony persuades him to wait until she has appealed to her husband. She does so, visiting him in his room at a fraternity house. Max Vernon, living in the same house, arrives and goes to his room. Tony ends her visit to Thayer and reports. Vernon leaves the house almost immediately afterwards, visibly in a state of excitement. He has a bundle, carelessly tied, apparently clothing to be renovated, under his arm.

CHAPTER IV.—Welch's appeal to Ivy to end her affair with Thayer is fruitless. He determines to see Thayer. Despite Ivy's protestations, he does so, and after he leaves, Carmelino, frat house janitor, finds Thayer dead, stabbed in the throat. Reagan, Maryland's police chief, takes charge of the case.

CHAPTER V.—The Maryland bank is robbed of $100,000, the robber escaping with the money after being shot and apparently badly wounded. Jim Hanvey, famous detective, goes to investigate the robbery. Randolph Fluke, the bank president, tells Hanvey he believes Max Vernon was driving the car in which the robber got away.

CHAPTER VI.—Thayer, Fluke, tells Hanvey, has been systematically obtaining Vernon of large sums, in card games, and Vernon, apparently, has finally realized it. Reagan instructs Hanvey to take charge of the murder case, evidence implicating Vernon in both the murder and robbery. Tony Peyton, Larry Welch, and Max Vernon are under arrest as Thayer murder suspects.

CHAPTER VII

LARRY WELCH was lying full length on the bed when the door opened. He stared with amazement at Reagan's companion, Hanvey, who was mopping at his forehead with a purple and white handkerchief and puffing like a porpoise. His little, fishy eyes turned protestingly toward Reagan.

"You shouldn't have done it, John." "What?" "Walked me all the way down here. I'm all in." "The turnkey in the corridor closed the door, and Reagan performed the introductions.

"Mr. Welch—this is Mr. Hanvey; Jim Hanvey. He's in charge of this case." "The youth hesitated, but Hanvey's fleshy paw came out and Larry met it with a firm grip and a quick, friendly smile. Hanvey blinked, nodded and seated himself.

"Slidown, Welch. I'd like to talk with you a few minutes." "Whatever you say, sir." "You understand, Welch, that you don't have to talk at all if you don't want to. I'm just telling you that if you won't think I'm trying to put anything over."

"I understand, sir." "I could say that anything you mentioned could be used against you. Instead I'll just say that if you're innocent, the more you talk, the more chance there is of me helping you. If you're guilty—well, that's a gray horse of another color, and my name ain't Sir, either."

Larry grinned. "I understand." "I'll spout one thing more. Max and Reagan are out to find out who killed Pat Thayer and we ain't got the slightest ambition to hang an innocent man. Now—shall I go on and talk to you or let you alone? I mean that if you want to help us, maybe we can help you. If you don't—then there ain't a bit of use wasting everybody's time."

He Stared With Amazement at Reagan's Companion.

Hanvey's tone was gentle, his manner disarming. He seemed so guileless, so transparent. Larry paced slowly up and down the room. Reagan followed him with his eyes. Finally, the young man turned and spoke to Hanvey.

"May I ask one question?" "Sure, Son—sure."

"Have you spoken to Miss Peyton yet?"

"No."

"Can I believe that?"

Hanvey's eyes opened slowly. "Gosh, Son—I dunno whether you can believe it or not. We don't neither of us have to believe nothing. But I haven't seen Miss Peyton, and that's a fact."

Larry hesitated—but only for a moment. "I believe you," he said, and then added: "I'll talk."

Jim yawned. "All right, Welch. Go ahead and talk."

"I'd rather that you questioned me."

"About what?"

"Whatever you want to know."

Hanvey lighted one of his obnoxious cigars and grinned at Reagan. "Maybe that ain't such a bad idea, John. What do you think?"

"I guess so, Jim."

"You did go to see Pat Thayer at the fraternity house day before yesterday, didn't you, Welch?"

"Yes," Larry's voice was low. It was plain that he was weighing words.

"What about?"

"My sister."

"Miss Ivy Welch?"

"Yes."

"What was wrong there?"

"Nothing . . . that is, I didn't want anything to be wrong. I told Thayer that I preferred that he see less of Ivy."

"Did you tell him why?"

"I told him that there was too much difference in their ages. He was twenty-three and Ivy just a seventeen-year-old kid. I didn't think it was a very good idea to let the friendship continue."

"How long had Thayer been going with your sister?"

"I don't know exactly. Several months, I guess."

"Anything special happen recently?"

Larry's eyes were focused on the floor. "Nothing."

"You just made up your mind to see Thayer without anything special happening, eh?"

"Yes. When I say nothing special—I mean . . . He rose, walked across the room, and then returned to stand in front of the huge detective. "I spoke to my sister first. I told her to lay off Pat Thayer and she said she wouldn't. I said that forced me to see him. And so I went to his fraternity house."

"You saw him?"

"Yes."

"Alive or dead?"

Larry's eyes widened, and instinctively he drew back as though to ward off a blow.

"What do you mean?" he asked—and his voice trembled.

"Gosh! Son—I don't mean nothing. You told me to ask questions, and I'm just doing what you asked."

"It was such a queer question."

"Maybe so. I dunno. Of course you know he's dead now, don't you?"

"Yes," bitterly; "I understand they're holding me for his murder."

"Well, . . . what would be more natural than what I asked you? It shapes up kind of queer, Son. If Thayer was dead when you got to his room, why it's a cinch you couldn't have killed him, ain't it?"

"Yes . . ."

"But if he was alive when you got there, it don't look very nice because everybody knows that you were the last person in that room before the body was found. So I ask you again: When you got to his room, was he alive or dead?"

The boy's face was white, but he answered in a level voice.

"He was alive."

"You're sure you didn't quarrel?"

"Positive."

"Thayer didn't get sore?"

Again that strained, haggard light flashed in Larry's eyes.

"No-o . . . he didn't get sore."

"Not at all?"

"I don't know. I was only there for a few minutes."

"And there wasn't any quarrel?"

Larry whirled on his inquisitor.

"How many times do I have to tell you that we didn't quarrel?"

"None," murmured Hanvey gently. "Gosh! Son—you don't have to tell me a thing. Any minute you get tired of my questions, I'll quit. I ain't aiming to get you peeved up. Now, if you'd rather I wouldn't ask you no more questions—"

"I'm sorry, Mr. Hanvey. Please go on."

"Thanks, Son. And any time I step on your pet bunion don't hesitate to say so. It ain't my idea to get any man riled at me."

"I understand. What else do you wish to know about that interview?"

"Nothing."

The boy was surprised. "Nothing?"

"Not a thing. You've told me all I need to know. According to the way I understand it: Thayer was alive when you got there and you and he had a nice friendly chat—that is, it wasn't exactly friendly, but you didn't quarrel. Then you left. Ain't that the way it was?"

"Yes."

"Yes—it happened just that way."

"Good. That clears things up in my mind. Now can I ask you something else?"

"Surely."

"Do you know Miss Antonette Peyton?"

Reagan saw Larry's figure stiffen defensively, and there was the briefest hesitation before he answered.

"Yes."

"Do you know Max Vernon?"

"Yes."

"Like him?"

"He's a nice chap."

"When you were at the fraternity house to see Thayer—did you happen to see Max Vernon anywhere about?"

"No."

"Or Miss Peyton?"

"No."

Hanvey folded his hands on his huge stomach. "You object if I ask you a personal question, Welch?"

"Go ahead."

"You're pretty keen for Miss Peyton, aren't you?"

Larry flushed. "I admire her very much."

"Nothing more?"

"I don't see . . . No, it's no more than that."

Amazingly enough, Hanvey did not pursue that topic. It seemed to Reagan that Jim was constantly coming to the verge of vital disclosures and then going off on another tack.

"Were Thayer and Miss Peyton very friendly?"

"I don't think so."

"You're not sure?"

"No."

"She hadn't ever mentioned him to you? You haven't any idea why she went to visit Thayer at the fraternity house, have you?"

Larry seemed troubled. He raised his voice and spoke vehemently.

"You seem more interested in Miss Peyton than in me," he accused. "It's perfectly ridiculous to think that she had anything to do with Thayer's death. She left that fraternity house before I got there. When I arrived Thayer was still alive. Therefore she couldn't have killed him."

"Dog-gone if that ain't right, Son. I just plumb forgot that. I sure did. Well, good-by, Son—and much obliged."

"You—you don't wish to ask me anything else?"

"Nope, I reckon you've told me about everything there is to tell, haven't you?"

"Why—why, yes . . . I guess so."

"Well, by-by, and good luck."

The door closed behind them, and Larry Welch, thoroughly bewildered and not a little ill at ease, stared at the mute panels.

In the corridor John Reagan faced his companion. He could contain himself no longer.

"Welch was lying!" he announced.

Jim Hanvey smiled.

"Sure he was, John: sure he was. But that ain't what interests me. What I crave to know is—how much? And why?"

CHAPTER VIII

SUMMER had settled down upon the Maryland campus. While every man and woman connected with the college was vitally interested in the Thayer killing, their interest could not very well be termed excitement.

The students, as a whole, could not believe any of the three suspects guilty. It was a nasty mess all around—the college agreed on that.

A half dozen undergrads who were lounging on the lawn in front of the Lambda Theta Pi house saw John Reagan drive up in his shiny little car. They saw someone else, too—an astounding fat man who lay back in the seat next to the driver and complained bitterly about the heat. Later someone passed the word that the fat man was a famous detective and was greeted with an outburst of derisive laughter. "That bird a detective! Ha-ha!"

Hanvey snorted up the stairway in Reagan's wake. They entered the room. Once inside Reagan stood back and curiously watched his celebrated companion.

Hanvey's fishlike little eyes looked everywhere and appeared to see nothing. Reagan waited for him to do something—and was disappointed. Jim merely stood in one spot, breathing audibly and mopping the back of his neck. He finally turned, and Reagan prepared for a pronouncement of importance.

"One thing I'm sure of," said Hanvey.

"What?"

"I never have felt no hotter weather!"

It was Reagan who was forced to remind Hanvey that they were in a room.

after that because it would just have been my memory. I can see now . . ."

He opened the door and stepped into the hall. From where he stood he could see that section of the chalk mark which denoted the position of Thayer's feet and ankles.

"That's what Carmelino says he saw, Jim."

"I see . . ."

Hanvey walked back in the room and Reagan followed, closing the door again.

"Did you look over his papers?" asked the fat man.

"Sure."

"Find anything?"

"I think so. I found his bank book for one thing. He's deposited some large amounts and there ain't much question that he was getting them from Max Vernon."

"Any other deposits?"

"Yes. Some small, and others as high as a couple of hundred dollars. But there ain't any record of where they came from."

"Any letters?"

"A few."

"From girls?"

"Plenty. Especially from Ivy Welch—Larry's sister. Want to read 'em?"

"Mushy?"

"I'll say. And how! The kid was crazy about that bird and no mistake. He was her first love and all that sort of thing. There wasn't anything in the world she wouldn't do for him."

Jim Hanvey was staring into the sunshine beyond the closed windows; there was a queer, soft light in his usually expressionless eyes.

"I reckon I won't read 'em, John. I never could get a whole of a laugh out of love letters."

Reagan flushed. He knew Hanvey hadn't meant to rebuke him . . . but, by gosh! who ever would have suspected that mountain of flesh of being a sentimentalist?

There was an awkward silence, which Reagan broke.

"What now, Jim?"

"Now? Golly! I dunno. What do you reckon I ought to do?"

Again Reagan felt baffled. There were moments and this was one—when he believed Hanvey was superbly stupid.

"Would you like to see Farnum and Benson?"

"No-o. I reckon not."

"Don't you want to talk to Mike Carmelino? I guess he knows a lot about Thayer and Vernon both."

Jim's eyes lighted, as though at a new and very pleasing idea.

"That's a swell thought, John. Where'll we find this janitor?"

MRS. ASA H. SESSIONS

The death of Mrs. Edith Estella Sessions, wife of Asa H. Sessions occurred Thursday, May 4, at 10:15 a. m., at the home of her sister, Mrs. P. C. Lapham, after an illness of a year's duration, the greater part of the time being confined to her bed and suffering much pain.

Mrs. Sessions was born in Woodstock, Jan. 3, 1876, the daughter of the late Henry H. and Alice Cotton Russ, and lived the greater part of her life in her native town where she received her education in the public schools and in Norway High School, and was for several years was a successful teacher.

She was a Universalist by faith and active in the local church when a resident of the town. She was a Silver Star member of Franklin Grange of Bryant Pond, and although for many years she was unable to attend the meetings, she was interested in everything pertaining to its good.

Mrs. Sessions was a woman of keen mind, deeply interested in the welfare of the community and was highly respected. She was one who was always ready to minister to friend or neighbor in sickness or trouble. Her feelings were kindly toward all and her judgments charitable. There was no envy or malice in her disposition, only good wishes for all. Her life was one of service putting aside all thought of self when opportunity to help confronted her. One wonders at the going out of a life like this, a life so rich in possibilities of usefulness at what should have been almost the prime of its powers.

May 14, 1898 she became the wife of Asa H. Sessions of Woodstock, where they began life on a farm where they lived for many years, then moved to Bethel and carried on an automobile business, later selling their business and moved to Abbott's Mills, Rumford, where they engaged in lumbering and the manufacturing of dowels. Through all these business ventures she was a prominent factor, acting as bookkeeper and valuable assistant, besides attending to her home duties.

She is survived by her husband, one sister, Mrs. Mary Lapham of Bethel, two brothers, Walter I. and Albert H. Russ of Bryant Pond, beside several nieces, and a host of friends.

Funeral services were held from the Lapham home, Saturday, May 6, at 2:30 p. m., conducted by Rev. Eleanor B. Forbes of West Paris. Interment in Riverside Cemetery.

LEWIS FRANCIS CUMMINGS

Lewis F. Cummings was born in Albany, Maine, November 1, 1843; the youngest son of Francis Peabody Cummings. In 1862 he enlisted as a private in the 26th Maine Regiment and was promoted the following year to second lieutenant. He served in the regiment reorganized as the 30th Maine Volunteers until the close of the war. He graduated from the Law Department of Michigan University in 1869 and practiced his profession in Chicago. He was a member in Chicago of Julius White Post No. 740 G. A. R. Of late years he had retired from practice. He made his home at 3021 Broadway, Chicago. The latter part of January he was taken ill and a few weeks later was removed to the Veterans Administration Hospital at Illinois, Illinois. In his home and in the hospital he received the utmost care and attention but he passed away on April 16th at the advanced age of nearly 90 years. His body was cremated and was buried in Graceland Cemetery, Chicago.
